Petsafe shock collar stopped working

Why isn't my dog's shock collar working? Why is my PetSafe collar blinking red? How do you test a barking collar? How do you test a shock collar? What does flashing red light mean on invisible fence collar? How tight should a shock collar be? Can dogs sleep with collars on? Can shock collar kill dog? Can you use a shock collar in the rain? Can you leave a collar on your dog all the time? Can I leave a prong collar on my dog? How do I fix my PetSafe transmitter? xSorry to interruptCSS Error You've invested a ton of money into a techie solution to keep your dog from barking or digging. All of a sudden, your dog shock collar stops working! Don't get too worked up about the situation. In an overwhelming majority of cases, you can fix it yourself easily so the static corrections start working again. Here's how to check and fix your dog shock collar in a nutshell. Check that the battery on the receiver collar is fully charged and replace it as needed. Verify that the transmitter has power, is on, and it's functioning. If you have a handheld transmitter then also check it's battery and replace it if needed. Next, confirm that the transmitter and collar are properly synced. Then check that you haven't set the correction level so low that it isn't responding. Lastly, check the fit of the collar on your dog. It should be snug but not too tight with constant light contact of the probes on your dog's skin. Quick Facts - E-collars and shock collars keep getting better and better. Overall the market has grown more than 150% from 2016 through 2021 (source). According to Sgt. Rod Hampton, Canine Unit Supervisor of the Round Rock (Texas) Police Department Canine Unit, the most effective use of e-collars is controlling dogs at a distance (when verbal commands are harder to hear) and preventing accidental bites (source). Below we'll go in depth on what to do when your e-collar or shock collar stops working. Either the Transmitter or Receiver is Switched Off It sounds unbelievable, but the most common problem is caused by users not turning both the receiver collar and remote on. Before you do anything else, check that you've switched them on and they're both charged up. Modern shock collars usually have a lock mode, which keeps you from applying a static correction to your dog by accident. Make sure this isn't on by mistake. Double-check with your model's instructions that the transmitter and receiver collar are synced correctly. 2. Charger Doesn't Make Good Contact If your charger isn't making good contact with the contact points on the unit itself, then it might appear to suddenly stop working. Check to see if the charger port on the receiver collar's shock module got dirty. Owners of bigger dogs that like to dig often have this issue. You might also find that the contact points got bent a little. In that case, you can usually work the unit back together again the right way. Check out this easy way of doing it: Should none of these steps work, you'll want to check the charger itself. Sometimes they need to be carefully reinserted into the wall to get them to work. 3. Shock Collar Not Making Contact All dog fur isn't created equal. Most shock collars include longer terminals on the underside of the module, which is best for longer haired dogs. You can usually adjust them a little bit by twisting them to make them go up or down. If they're not fitted right, then your dog won't receive any level of correction when you use the receiver collar. Try adjusting the straps as well. If you still can't get it to work, then try the fitting method shown in this video: 4. Strap or Clasp Have Broken When the receiver collar's clasp breaks, you usually have to replace it. If you've ever replaced one on a normal bark collar or shock collar before, then the process is exactly the same. There's a small ring that holds the belt in place. You can fish the old strap out and put a new one in without compromising the shock module. Take a look at how this seemingly complicated fix can actually be pretty easy: 5. Dog Not Responding To Shock Collar In most cases, you want to set the correction level as low as possible. Owners of bigger dogs might find that their pets can't feel a small shock, however. Very gradually raise the shock level until you find something that works. You don't want to dial it up suddenly. How To Connect, Pair, Or Sync Dog Shock Collars To A Transmitter Instructions to pair a receiver collar and a transmitter will vary by brand. Some collars will actually work with transmitters made by other brands. See our full article on which receivers and transmitters will pair up here. Here are the basic instructions to pair collars and transmitters: Turn on the transmitter Make sure the receiver collar is off. Hold the on button on the receiver collar for 4-5 seconds. A few things can happen depending on your model. Either the light on the collar turns off or starts flashing. Either way, wait for it to change. Hold the pairing button on the transmitter for 4-5 seconds. That will trigger a response from the collar. Again, the lights may start flashing, turn off, or it may vibrate. That signals they've been paired. Again, keep in mind the instructions above are highly generic. Check your model's specific instructions to do this correctly. Many come automatically paired and don't give an option to pair them manually without special equipment. Want to supercharge your training skills? We recommend this Brain Training for Dogs. It was created by Adrienne Farricelli, a CPDT-KA certified dog trainer. Here's what Adrienne has to say: No matter what your dog's problem behavior is... Be it jumping, peeing inappropriately, aggression, pulling on the leash...or whatever... There is ONE SOLUTION that can help STOP this problem now The sad fact is... Most Dog trainers miss this solution entirely. They give you cookie cutting training programs. They use outdated and 'mean' dominance techniques. Or worse yet... They have no qualifications and are complete phonies. So what's the answer to stopping your Dog's behavior problems? In 4 simple words... Discovering your dog's hidden intelligence. Let me explain... In my 10 years as a certified trainer... there's ONE BIG LESSON I have learned. More intelligent dogs are better behaved. A More intelligent dog takes commands easier ...and understands what you need from them. The good news is... No matter how clever you think your dog is. You can >>>unlock their hidden intelligence quickly and easily. >>>I'll explain everything on this page. Don't waste a second longer coping with problem behaviors you don't need to be dealing with. PS Check out the brain training for Dogs course now. It's great for eliminating any bad behaviors by tapping into your dog's hidden intelligence. PPS- check out the cool dog pictures on this page. FAQ How Do You Reset a Dog Shock Collar? Every model does things just a little differently. If your bark collar or shock collar has a reset button, then you probably need to push and hold it. Otherwise, try turning the receiver off on your bark collar or receiver collar. Hold the on button until the receiver light burns solid. Eventually it will turn off, and you can release the button. You may then have to press the continuous stimulation button on the remote to get the unit to work again. This isn't necessarily a universal technique, but it works on a large enough number of collars. Don't forget to check the little pamphlet that came with yours! How To Tell If A Shock Collar is Working? Some people suggest testing the collar on your own fingers. If you have any kind of heart condition, then this is most inadvisable! A better idea is to switch it to audio correction mode. Take the collar off your dog and then apply a static correction. It should make a beeping tone. You could also try putting it on vibration mode and testing it since people can't hear the tones made by some collars. Do Shock Collars Hurt a Dog? According to Dr. Randall Lockwood of the Humane Society, pet owners that use equipment from responsible manufacturers greatly reduce the risk of any injury from a shock collar. Keep in mind that you need to use the collar in a manner consistent with its labeling. One study published in the Journal of Applied Animal Behaviour Science found that dogs didn't show increased stress levels after getting used to the concept of shock controls. Way back in 1983, scientists published a study in the Journal of Experimental Psychology that suggested avoidance-learning methods could actually make dogs safer. If they learn not to be aggressive, then they won't get hurt trying to do something dangerous. What to Do if Your Shock Collar Won't Turn On Try setting the receiver in a sunny place where your pet can't get to it. Moisture from dog slobber and the ground can sometimes temporarily short these out. You can also try taking the batteries out and drying the unit with a paper towel. Make sure to clean the outside as well. Some pet owners have suggested that leaving the batteries out of the unit and putting them back in later can actually get an uncooperative shock collar to turn on again! What to Do if Your Shock Collar Isn't Charging Assuming you've also tried the suggestions in the last step, you might want to just wait. Give the collar receiver or bark collar some time to charge. In some cases, it might take all night to charge a dead battery. Check to make sure the charger's contact points aren't bent either. You might want to replace the charger if you can't get anything to work. Manufacturers are starting to use standard USB cell phone chargers, so you can try one if you happen to have an extra. We recommend the multicharger below (click on the image to see the price on Amazon or click here). When all this fails, you'll need to check the batteries. Try opening the module with a screwdriver. The batteries should have a number directly on them, which makes it easy to order a replacement.
